> The Internet is permeating our lives because of its power. This brings obvious social and > economic value. Less obvious are the social and economic hurts.The Net's reach is global, but > Net access is far from global; and as the IT caravan rolls on, stragglers slip further behind.
> However, the Net is a cheap power just made for isolated people, and thus it offers access to > an unprecedented equality of opportunity. Women have equal access. But the already poor do > not. Equity here raises questions of ...

> Rolling out an administrative system in a decentralized business model can easily produce a > result that is both a technical success and public relations failure. This paper will revisit the > two systems rollouts at Tufts that inaugurated a support, training and communications strategy that reinforced a new way of doing business in an academic environment. The Tufts' solution is a directorate that owns support, training, documentation and web services. Together, it is supported by the communicatio ...
